CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Two More Reported Yesterday—A Few Extracts from a Pamphlet Showing How to Treat It.

The epidemic of measles in this city still continues unabated. Yesterday there was another case reported, and one of scarletina.

In view of the notion prevailing that measles is a harmless disease, and under that mistaken belief many parents needlessly expose the children to it, the board of health of this city has thought it wise at this time, when the disease has become so prevalent here, to issue a note of warning. Following are found a few facts as to its dangerous tendencies and a few simple precautionary measures and advice as to treatment. These are culled from a pamphlet issued by the state board of health:

Measles is an eruptive, contagious disease most common in childhood. It is of such universal prevalence, and the attacks are often so mild that it has come to be looked upon as a disease which is dangerous neither to life or health. This view is, however, entirely erroneous, death or permanent injuries to the body often resulting from the disease. More than 10,000 persons die annually from measles in Great Britain. It killed, in other words, about twice as many persons as scarlet, typhoid, typhus and other fevers and smallpox, all put together. In the city of Pittsburgh, for the twelve years preceding 1894, the average number of deaths from measles was eighty-three. This would give an average annual mortality for this state of 2,075. But it is not because of the deaths alone that measles is a dangerous disease. It often leaves the eyes, ears, bowels, respiratory passages and the lungs in a weakened and dangerous condition. Impaired eyes and ears often date from an attack of measles. There is good reason for believing that measles may leave children predisposed to consumption of the lungs and bowels. It is because of these facts that the state board of health has published a circular, believing that many lives and much suffering may be saved by following its teachings.

PERSONS LIABLE TO MEASLES.

Measles is most commonly seen in the young although any person who has not had the disease is liable to contract it. Very few persons escape it until adult life. Second attacks have been quite frequently observed of late years, and it has even been known to occur a third time. It is very severe in adults.

PERIODS OF INCUBATION AND INFECTIOUSNESS.

The least period required to develop the disease after exposure is four days; the average period is nine or ten days; the greatest is fourteen days.

GENERAL PRECAUTIONS.

Measles may be avoided by sending children from home when an epidemic prevails, by keeping them from day and night schools, and by isolating the patients, thus preventing all communication with well children.

Quarantine should extend to fifteen days from the last exposure to infection and until complete recovery. Nurses should be quarantined with their patients.

These sick with measles need little medication, unless complications arise, but great care and good nursing. It is important to call in a physician at the start, and to obtain from him the fullest directions for the management of the case, and to follow these implicitly.

PRECAUTIONS DURING CONVALESCENCE.

Use every means to prevent taking cold, and avoid recovery. Inducement to allow the patient to go upon damp ground without overcoats, or into the cold without being well wrapped up. For a violation of these precautions a life may be lost. The child should become sore and weak, as they often do during the attack, the room should be darkened and all use of the eyes forbidden for reading, sewing, or similar purposes until convalescence is well established.

Remember, measles is a dangerous disease and to be avoided if possible, children should never be purposely or needlessly exposed to it. Should a cold, bronchitis or catarrh, sore eyes or discharges from the ears or deafness remain after an attack of measles, the child should be continued under medical care, and every effort made by means of proper food and clothing to speedily restore it to its normal health. A cold following measles should never be neglected.

Since the eyes are often inflamed and usually weakened by an attack of measles, children should not be induced to read or to strain the eyes in any way. They should be kept in the dark or in a room where the light is well regulated. They should be kept in bed or in a room where the air is pure and the temperature is comfortable.
